Dear Parishioners:

In my work as the Diocesan Lobbyist at the RI Statehouse I often have some odd encounters. Recently while I was at the Statehouse a rather prominent special-interest lobbyist engaged in a short exchange with me. He thinks that the Church should not have tax-exempt status. He's not a secular humanist but an active Catholic who regularly attends Mass.

He was responding to the call for School Choice in our state. As you may know School Choice involves allowing all parents, especially the economically disadvantaged, decide which school to send their children. However, for the poor the choice is limited because they cannot afford tuitions and often there are not enough seats in the Charter Schools. So School Choice calls for a tax-credit or voucher system that would enable all families a choice in their children's education.

This lobbyist felt that if the Catholic Church along with Jewish Schools of RI, Christian Schools and non-religious private schools wanted School Choice they should pay taxes. He was really directing his emphasis upon the Catholic Church. His argument for removal of exempting for religious groups is not new and seems to be picking up more supporters as our nation gets more secular.

I often hear this type of argument anytime I lobby on a particular issue or if a Catholic Bishops speaks out on a social issue like abortion, marriage, immigration, peace or poverty.

These calls for the federal government to revoke the tax-exempt status of churches usually take place in election years! The most common arguments made for taxing churches are that exemptions deny the government important sources of revenue. Also, many claim that churches often abuse their tax-exempt status by violating IRS guidelines that prohibit them from engaging in political activity. The IRS specifically defines "politics" as seeking to influence the election of candidates and "lobbying" as seeking to influence legislation.

The Catholic Church cannot and does not endorse candidates or political parties. However, the Church can educate their followers about the voting record of elected officials and the stance on issues of political candidates. This is part of the Church's mission of education not a political endorsement. The Church can and does lobby on both local and national level elected officials about issues of concern.

None of this activity is illegal or prohibited by the IRS. In fact, many non-profit, tax exempt groups do the same thing and they are often non-religious. In fact, the IRS exempts many different types of organizations from paying taxes, including labor unions, chambers of commerce, social clubs, and "social welfare" organizations such as the National Organization for Women (NOW) and the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU).

Interestingly enough I just read an article about the National Football League (NFL) and its tax-exempt status. Some US Senators are now questioning why the NFL is tax exempt since the NFL Commissioner is paid $30 million a year. By the way the NFL spent over $5 million lobbying US Congress over the last few years.

For the record, all priests pay Federal and State income tax and property tax on their personal property like homes and cars. The Catholic Church is tax-exempt as an institution because She provides a public good. In fact, the Catholic Church is the second largest provider of social services and education after the government. Should we pay taxes? Would that curtail some of the good works we provide to all people, Catholic or not?

Perhaps we should begin to look at non-profits which don't provide as much to the common good of our nation before we go after Churches. My lobbyist friend works for an extremely large tax-exempt non-profit himself. When I brought this to his attention he began to waiver his position slightly.

You can hear more about the "Church in the Public Square" on Monday at 7:00PM. I hope you join us. Happy Presidents' Day. Have a great school vacation week. Be safe. God Bless.

Father Healey

Dear Fr. Connors: Should I continue to pray for the same things even though the prayer is not answered? For example, I pray for health for my father but he still struggles with disease. Do I continue praying for his health?

This question is very common. It also is quite challenging. But getting to the heart of it, gets to the heart of the truth about prayer.

Prayer is raising the mind and the heart to God. It is communicating with Him, talking to Him like a friend. For the Christian, prayer is entering into the eternal dialogue of the Father and the Son. It is to be taken up into the relationship of love among the persons of the Blessed Trinity. Intercessory prayer—praying for other people—is one type of prayer.

Just like God could feed the world without our help, but instead draws us into His work of helping people on a physical level, so too, God could give spiritual help—grace—without us. However, ordinarily He works by drawing us into His work through intercessory prayer. Our prayers really do have an effect; they really help.

However it is true, like the question says, sometimes God's will is not the physical healing of someone. Perhaps, His healing, forgiveness, comfort or strength happens on a spiritual level. Most important, of course, perhaps our prayers help a loved one onto Heaven.

We should pray for others because God commands us to do so. He also tells us our prayers have an effect, even if we don't see it right away. As one author says, if we were able to see the effect of our prayers, we would get on our knees and not get up for a long time.

If you have a question on the Church and Her teachings for Fr. Connors send it to associatepastor@olmparish.org

We offer our prayers and condolences to the family of Our Lady of Mercy Parishioners, Georgette Denning and Bruce Hart whose Masses of Christian Burial were celebrated here last week.

May they rest in peace.
